Remote Learning System [For Master's Degree Program]

In order to better meet the diverse needs of enrollees in our master's program and to expand opportunities for learning and research, the Graduate School of Foreign Language Education has set up a remote learning system for the fields of Foreign Language Education (English language research only) and Translation and Interpreting Studies.

It is therefore possible for students who find commuting to university difficult due to work commitments or because they live far away to complete their master's degree program by taking courses online.

In addition to the standard two-year course, students can also complete the three-year course using the remote learning system. However, it is not possible to complete the Aston DD Program and the Japanese Language Education Specialist Training Course online because they include face-to-face classes.

Students who use the remote learning system can take classes from their home or workplace using an Internet-based application. Most classes can be taken remotely, with a few exceptions due to the nature of the content of the classes. Even the final exam (oral examination) can be taken remotely.

There is no special entrance exam for those who wish to use the remote enrolment system. Instead, selection will be made using the existing (face-to-face) entrance examination. No quota is set for the remote learning system.

Use of the remote learning system is limited to people residing in Japan. Please obtain permission from your preferred academic supervisor before applying. If no signature is written in the "Academic supervisor's signature regarding the remote learning system" column in your "Statement of Reasons for Applying", you will not be able to use this system. If you are unable to obtain your preferred adviser's signature because of distance, please contact the Kansai University Graduate School Admissions Division in advance.

Extended Enrollment System

In order to better meet the diverse needs of enrollees and expand opportunities for graduate-level learning and research, the Graduate Schools of Law, Letters, Informatics, Foreign Language Education and Research, Psychology (Psychology Major), East Asian Cultures, Governance, Health and Well-being offer a three-year course, in addition to the standard two-year Master's Degree Program. This program offers the following characteristics.

(1) Annual Course Credit Limits

Under this program the limit of annual credit is as follows:

【Graduate Schools of Law, Informatics, Psychology (Psychology Major), Governance】

Course	First Year	Second Year	Third Year
Two-year Course	28	28	—
Three-year Course	20	20	16

【Graduate Schools of Letters, Foreign Language Education and Research, East Asian Cultures, Health and Well-being】

Graduate School of Governance	Seminar of Governance I and II is assigned to first-year students, while Seminar of Governance III and IV, a research guidance class that focuses on a specific topic, is assigned to third-year students. Submission of master's thesis or a report on a specific theme of research is in the third-year.
Graduate School of Health and Well-being	Seminar of Health and Well-being (1)A and (1)B, a research guidance class for their master's thesis is assigned to first-year students. Seminar of Health and Well-being (2)A and (2)B is assigned to third-year students. The master's thesis is submittal in the third-year.

(3) Changing Courses after Enrollment

At the time enrollees become second-year students, they can request to switch from the three-year course to the two-year course if they satisfy the following conditions as designated by each Graduate School. If they do so, at the Graduate Schools of Law, Informatics, Psychology (Psychology Major), Governance, the course limit of their second-year will be 28 credits, and at the Graduate Schools of Letters, Foreign Language Education and Research, East Asian Cultures, Health and Well-being, the course limit of their second-year will be 30 credits.

Eligible students will be notified during the fall semester of their first-year (Enrollees from the fall semester: spring semester of their first-year) by the University’s Information System. Please note that it is impossible to switch from the two-year course to the three-year course.

Graduate School of Law	The student must have earned 20 credits, which is the requirement for submitting a master’s thesis, as of the end of his or her first-year.
Graduate School of Letters
Graduate School of Foreign Language Education and Research
Graduate School of Psychology (Psychology Major)
Graduate School of East Asian Cultures
Graduate School of Health and Well-being
Graduate School of Informatics	The student must have earned 16 credits, which is the requirement for submitting a master’s thesis, as of the end of his or her first-year.
Graduate School of Governance	The student must have earned 20 credits, which is the requirement for submitting a master’s thesis or a report on a specific theme of research, as of the end of his or her first-year.

(4) Limit of Years Enrolled

Limit of years enrolled for both the two-year course and three-year course is 4 years.

(5) Graduation Requirements

The graduate requirements are the same for both the two-year and three-year courses. Students enrolled in the three-year course shall take three years to complete the same requirements as students enrolled in the two-year course. For more information, see the “Graduate School Guidelines,” which you will receive at the time of enrollment.

(6) School Fees

As for School fees, refer to ‘8 School Fees and Other Fees for 2024’ (in the separate file “Common Items of all Graduate Schools” pp.20-26).

If you change your attendance period of the Graduate School in the course of study, you must also pay the tuition of the 3rd grade at the beginning of the 2nd grade.

(Confirm the exact amount of the school fees and other fees to pay when you take the changing procedures.)

If you wish to apply for the three-year course under the Extended Enrollment System, select “Three-year Course” for the “Extended Enrollment” field on the Online Application. Your selection of either course will have no effect on the admission decision.

If you wish to switch courses after being admitted, inform the Graduate School Admissions Division by Spring enrollment: January 12 (Fri), 2024.

Please note that applicants admitted under the University’s February Examination are not able to switch courses prior to their enrollment.

Remote Learning System [For Ph.D. Degree Program]

In order to better meet the diverse needs of enrollees in our Ph.D. program and to expand opportunities for learning and research, the Graduate School of Foreign Language Education has set up a remote learning system.

It is therefore possible for students who find commuting to university difficult due to work commitments or because they live far away to complete their Ph.D. degree program by taking courses online. However, it is not possible to complete the Japanese Language Education Specialist Training Course online because it includes face-to-face classes.

Students who use the remote learning system can take classes from their home or workplace using an Internet-based application. Most classes can be taken remotely, with a few exceptions due to the nature of the content of the classes. Even the basic research ability test (QE), the hearing session, and the final exam (oral examination) can be taken remotely.

There is no special entrance exam for those who wish to use the remote enrolment system. Instead, selection will be made using the existing (face-to-face) entrance examination. No quota is set for the remote learning system.

Use of the remote learning system is limited to people residing in Japan. Please obtain permission from your preferred academic supervisor before applying.
